Consolidated Financial Results

1. Summary of Business Results

(1) Summary of Business Results for the Three-month Period

The following is an overview of the economic environment for the three-month period ended June 30, 2024.

The global economy slowed down mainly in the U.S. and China amidst high-interest rate environment with persistent inflation. In developed countries, while growth in the manufacturing sector was sluggish and personal consumption decelerated moderately in the U.S., the European economy slightly recovered primarily due to a decrease in inflation rates. In Japan, rebound in capital investment supported the economy despite the stagnant personal consumption. In emerging countries, the Chinese economy continued to be stagnant, however, an expansion of exports to the U.S. drove the economy particularly of Asian countries.

For prices of primary commodities, the demand remained weak due to a global economic slowdown while an escalation of geopolitical risks, among other factors, pushed up the price of certain commodities. Copper prices reached a record high in late May, driven by the expectation of announcement of economic stimulus measures in China, and others.

In the bond markets, interest rates rose in the U.S while the initiation of interest rate cuts was anticipated to be delayed. On the other hand, interest rates remained flat in Europe which started the interest rate cuts in June. The Japanese yen continued to depreciate further against the U.S. dollar. Stock market prices generally increased in major countries and regions, however, the prices declined in China.
